Course Description: We will explore five related and hotly debated topics in the philosophy of religion, and, in doing so, address the following questions:

- (i) What makes something a religion?
- (ii) Is it rational to hold religious beliefs? Should we care about rationality when it comes to religious belief?
- (iii) Could different religions be different paths to the same ultimate reality, or is only one, at most, a “way to God”?
- (iv) What is the relationship between science and religion?
- (v) What is the relationship between morality and religion? Must religious beliefs be true in order for morality to exist?

As we will see, the philosophy of religion leads naturally into just about every other area of philosophy, including epistemology, metaphysics, ethics, and the history of philosophy, and into particular central philosophical debates such as the debate over the nature of free will. This means that you will gain insight into many fundamental philosophical issues in this course. At the same time, the subject matter can be difficult. To do well in the course and to benefit from it, you must be willing to work hard and to subject your own views (whatever they may be) to critical evaluation. Evaluating our conception of ourselves and of the world is one of the distinguishing features of philosophy.

Requirements:

- Short reading responses/formulations of questions (150-200 words for each class meeting; 20 out of 27 required) 25%
- 1 midterm 20% (2/8)
- 1 paper (about 2200 words) 25% (Due 2/27)
- 1 take-home final exam (30%) (Due 3/20, 2:30)
- up to 5% extra credit for participation in class group assignments and discussion.

Note: A hard copy of your paper must be turned in, and an electronic copy uploaded to turnitin.com on our TED web site.

Note: Each assignment must be turned in order to receive credit for the course.
